Highs today will be in the 60's across the Texas and Oklahoma Panhandles. Elevated fire weather conditions will be possible across much of the area late in the morning into the early afternoon as breezy winds combine with low relative humidity.

Breezy, sunny, and mild weather on tap for today. Elevated fire weather conditions will be present due to the gusty winds and dry air.

Looking ahead to Monday and Tuesday, there appears to be a threat for severe weather across West Central Texas. The main threats at this time are large hail and damaging winds.

A cold front will bring showers and an isolated storm to eastern areas this morning. Behind the front, near critical fire weather conditions are possible across the western Hill Country, southern Edwards Plateau, and Rio Grande.
